Bishop, who holds the manor; church, reb. 1832 on the brow of the hill in place of Chomeley's chapel, has tombs of Platt (founder of the fellowships at Camb.), Bishop Atterbury's brother (once lecturer), Chief Justice Pemberton, the Paunceforts, and Coleridge and his nephew Hartley, who both died here (the former, 1834). Baker the chronicler was a resident, and the great Lord Bacon died at Lord Arundel's house from a cold caught in trying the experiment of preserving a dead fowl with snow. Opposite Cromwell Ho. (now a school) where the Protector lived, is his secretary's, or Marvell's, cottage. At the taverns here travellers used to swear over a pair of horns "not to kiss the maid when you may kiss the mistress, unless you like the maid better,—not to eat brown bread when you can get white, unless you like the brown better,"—and so forth. A point near Southgate Ho. commands a noble view of great extent. To save the steep hill, which rises 1 in 12 at some parts, a tunnel 300 yards long under Horsey Lane was projected by Vazie 1809, through the blue clay, which falling in when about 130 yds. were cut, an archway with 3 semi-arches at top was substituted, and opened 1813,—the new road leading past the Whittington almshouses and the site of a lazor house found. (Edw. IV.) by W. Poole; fossil copal, etc. were found in the cutting.

Highlands, The, or Hill country of Scotland, bounded partly by the Grampians, and lying W. and N. of a line from Dumbarton, through the passes of Aberfoil, Comrie, Killiecrankie (all in Perth.) to Braemar and round to Inverness, which is a sort of capital, is a land of mountains, rivers, and lakes, peopled by the Gael or Celt, a race differing in blood, language, dress, from their Saxon conquerors, before whom their forefathers retired to the hills like the old Britons, to whom they were allied. Here they lived in a savage and unsettled condition; were brave and hardy, but given to fighting and plunder, and known to their lowland neighbours only by repeated forays. Under their chiefs, they remained independent of the scottish kings, though tamed by Jas. V. (the Snowdon knight of Scott's 'Lady of the Lake') and some of his predecessors. In 1645, most of the clans assisted Montrose in behalf of Ch. I.; they were reduced by Cromwell, who planted garrisons at Inverness, Fort William, etc.; rose again at the revolution for Jas. II.,—and for his children, under Marr 1715, and again 1745, when with Ch. Stuart at their head they marched to Derby; but in the mean time the country had been laid open by military roads made by Gen. Wade 1787,—and the power of the chiefs was broken 1748 by the abolition of hereditary jurisdictions. Surface, about 18,500 sq. m., including Sutherland, Ross, Inverness, Argyll, parts of Elgin, Banff, Perth, Stirling, Dumfries; pop. about 805,000, much reduced since the last century by emigration, and dispersed over sheep-farms, or along the coast (and in the West Isles), but still gaelic-speaking. The first coach went through the highlands 1811; steamers now run along the W. shores, and through the Caledonian canal; and the value of land, stock, etc. has greatly increased (7 or 8 times in some cases) by the making of good roads. The clans and their badges were and are: Buchanan (S. highlands) birch, Cameron (Middle) oak, Campbell (W.) myrtle, Chisholm (N.) alder, Colquhoun (S.) hazel, Cumming (N.E.) common willow, Drummond holly, Farquharson (N.E.) purple foxglove, Ferguson popular. Following the 19 Sup. Registry districts of '45 (total pop., except Greenwich, 449,446 + 4512), the 'births' were 15,279, of whom 7441 were females, 935 or 6·1 per cent. illegit.; 'deaths' 9072 or 1 in 51, — the all-England av. being 46; 'marriages' 3960 (at church 3728) of which 2717 persons, or 38 per cent. signed with marks. — Except at the marsh borders of the Thames, London clay, with sand, etc. prevails along the N. (rising 446 ft. at Shooter's Hill, — ft. at Gad's Hill), to a line through Hayes, Farningham, Rochester, Rodmerham, Canterbury, Littlebourne, to Reculver; thence S. to the downs, which are one with the Surrey hills, near Brasted, Wrotham, Paddlesworth (hill 642 ft. highest in the co.), Cuxton, Buxley, Hollingbourne (616 ft.), Lenham, Wye, Stoning, to Folkestone (565 ft.), is chalk, which is found in all the E. corner and Thanet (except along the Stour), and shows itself here and there near the Thames; green sand lies further S. to the hills by Crookham, Mereworth, Barming (near the hop and fruit grounds round Maidstone, etc.), the Suttons, Chart, etc. to Hythe; and beyond (except Romney Marsh) belongs to the Weald — a level, rich, well wooded tract, which was part of the great forest of Coed Andred, and yields rag and purple stone in the hills about Tonb. Wells, Lambshurst, Goudhurst, etc. Fossil fruits, etc., with sulphur pyrites are found on N. side of Sheppey; marble is worked at Bethersden, fuller's earth at Boxley, lime at Woolwich, Greenhithe, in the Medway, etc. Silk, and a few mulins are manufactured at Canterbury (in 1847, a bad year, 80 and 140 were in the silk and flax mills), hop bagging at Maidstone, etc., coppers at Deptford and Whitstable (from the pyrites), powder at Dartford, Faversham, Ospringe, — paper (943 hands) at Boxley, Dartford, Dover, Maidstone, salt at Stonar, etc., wood toys (of holly, plum, etc.) at Tonbridge; linen bleaching is carried on at Crayford, Bexley, shipbuilding at Woolwich, Northfleet, Chatham; Feversham, Milton, etc. are famous for their oyster beds. Iron (out of the Weald clay and green sand), and cloth (about Cranbrook, Tenterden, etc.) were once made, — the 'Grey Coats' having founded some of the oldest families. Climate mild and genial; surface hilly, and abundantly wooded in the Weald and uplands with oaks, beech, chestnut, ash, willow, maple, birch, etc.; soil, on the whole clayey, mixed here and there with loam, sand, etc., improved by good husbandry, and fish, woollen rags, and chalk manures, — but sand and gravel prevail on the wastes of Blackheath, Bexley, Dartford, Malling, etc.; wheat, beans (10 to 20 bush. per acre), barley, oats, are the chief crops, — with canary (3 to 5 grs.), radish (8 to 24 bush.), and other seeds, vegetables, etc., in Thanet, which has a loamy soil, manured with seaweed, — peas, canary, spinach, mustard, and other seeds, in the rich sandy flats of Sandwich, Deal, Feversham, — peas, clover, in the fertile mould of Sheppey (where the best wheat is raised), — and rye, turnips, hay, etc., in the marl and clay of the Weald; wood is grown on the poor lands, — and asparagus, rhubarb, cauliflower, potatoes, etc., in the mkt. gardens at Deptford, Greenwich, Eltham, etc., along the great roads; hops (24,888 acres in '45, the duty being — L. at 2d. per lb.), which were first brought into use (Hen. VI.), are chiefly cultivated from Farleigh and Maidstone to Canterbury, and, mixed with the young apple, cherry (which the Romans introduced A. D. 48), and filbert trees, make a delightful show; thick coppices for hop-poles, clothes-props, etc., and orchards, abound; sheep (about 820,000, yielding 18,500 packs) are pastured on the downs of E. Kent, and (with herds of cattle) in the rich meadows on the Thames and of Romney marsh, where 800,000 of a superior long-wooled breed, which fattens early, are fed; and fine poultry, rabbits, venison, game, are abundant. From the prevalence of gavelkind custom, which is peculiar to this county, there are about 10,000 (?) freeholders; farms average from 10 to 200 acres, leases run from 7 to 14 yrs., and many old timbered farm-buildings exist. Smaller rivers are, the Darent (20 m. long), Cray (with trout), Ravensbourne (10 m.), Rother; trout are also found in the Stour; Tonbridge Wells, Sydenham, Canterbury, etc., have mineral springs. Of antiquities are: roman camps at Ospringe, Barham (Caesar's), Trenworth, Bonning (rom. villa), Folkestone, Stutfall, Keston or Holwood (anc. Noxiomagus), — danish at Milton, Hackendown, Dane-pits (a barrow), Kenardington, — saxon at Coeldred, — besides tumuli at Shottington, Woodnesboro', Shebbertswold, Liminge, Chartham, Sutton Valence, Julaber's Grave; druid circle at Addington, and a cromlech at Kit's Coty House; old abbeyes at Lesnes, Feversham, Canterbury (St. Augustin's), W. Killarney, Lakes of (66, 74) between the above, and the Tomies, Purple, Glen-a, and other peaks of MacGillycuddy's Reeks on the W., and which the best judges think to be the finest in the British islds., comprise the Upper, Torc, and Lower, lakes, at the head of R. Laune, in the country of the O'Donoghues of Ross, a branch of the MacCarthys More. The Upper, the smallest, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. by $\frac{1}{2}$ m. or 8 in circuit, is in the midst of mountains, with several small richly-wooded islds., as Rossbirkie, Stag, Eagle, Roynane, Arbutus—so called after that tree, which abounds all over the lakes, and was brought from Spain; near it Derrycunidy and its cascade, and the best view is from the police station. Long Range channel, 6 miles long, leads past the Eagle's nest (1700 ft. high, with a most extraordinary echo), and the Wier bridge into Torc or Middle Lake, 2½ m. by ¾, under Torc mountain, with Diniah, Bricken, and other islds.; near it is Torc fall, coming from the Devil's Punch-bowl in Mangerton mountain (which has a noble view), and Coom-na-goppul, or Glen of the Horse. The beautiful Glen-a-bay (where the lakes join) leads to the Lower or largest lake, 5½ m. by 2½, which has 85 islds. (limestone) large and small and well wooded, as Ross, with O'Donoghue's castle, whence that hero leapt into the lake, appearing sometimes like the spectre of the Brocken, and where stone hammers are found with which the copper mines were worked,—“sweet Innisfallen,” and its old abbey, where the ‘Annals’ were written,—Rabbits, O'Donoghue's Prison, Table and Horse, the Stag with its echoes,—and others. Around on the E. are Aghadoe cathedral, round tower, and Bp.'s Chair; Kenmare Pk., which has the Clogh-na-cuddy stone with the ‘foot-marks,’ Lissavigen druid circle (2 miles off), Muckruss abbey cloister ruins; to the W. is Dunloe Gap, a wild pass, with its castle, Ogham cave, Cwm duff or black valley, logan stone, etc. Besides the arbutus, which grows 7 and 9 ft. girth, and other trees, the rare and beautiful bristle fern is found near Torc fall,—also the osmunda regalis or large flowering fern, pinguicula grandiflora, etc.
